Goat Farming Offers Profitable Sideline

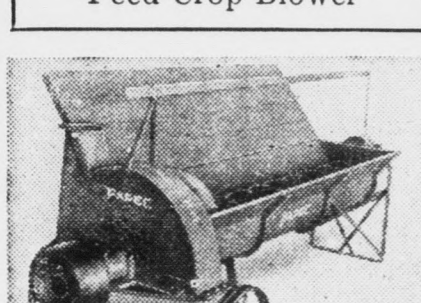

Easy to Handle and to Feed on Small Space

While there are nearly six million goats in the United States, less than 50,000 of them are milked. Much profit offers a source of revenue to the small diversified farmer. Practically immune to disease, requiring less than $1 a month to feed in winter, their adaptability to a project is worth considering. A cup of grain, handful of hay and a pinch of salt, together with a small lot for pasture, should produce 1.50 quarts of milk a year—much more than a cow's milk. Free from TB, with about three times as much milk as a cow's, goats are easy to handle and feed. Their milk is rich in cream and easily digested. Goats are the most popular breeds at present are Toggenburg, Saanen, Red Alpine and Nubian. Goats' meat,

Goats are becoming big business in American farming. Chevon is a healthy, tasty food. The goat has four stomachs, usually has on hand at least one day's food requirements, and the missing of a meal is often beneficial. Like any other animal, goats will respond to proper feeding practices. Contrary to public belief, goats do not eat in cant. Female goats are free from "goat odor." It is not recommended, however, that the male be kept near the house, or in cities.

Improved Machinery Feed Crop Blower

This crop blower elevates chopped hay or cut straw, silage, threshed grains, shavings or other bedding materials to any desired height with a minimum of labor. The blower shown above, manufactured by Papez Machine Company, Shortsville, N. Y., will put away a big load in short order with little or no hand labor.

Artificial Chicken

Insensitization Tested. Scarcity of quality roosters of some desirable characteristic can be overcome by the application of artificial insemination. As one rooster can service 70 hens a week by this method of reproduction, it becomes of commercial importance within the industry. Artificial insemination is also proving valuable in hybrid and cross breeding and in what would otherwise be forced or individual matings, or for hens kept in laying cages.

KEEP OUT

Keep your broiler chickens safe from the cold and flu by giving them a course of VITAMIN D. This is the most effective way to keep them healthy and growing fast.

Take My Word For It!

By FRANK COLEY

HOW DID IT START?

Q.—Who was "Davy Jones" and what is meant by his "locker"?
A.—In nautical lore, Davy Jones has long been spoken of as the evil spirit of the sea. The name is supposed to be a corruption of Dupuy, Dupuy, a word used among Negroes of the West Indies, designating a malevolent haunting spirit. And Jones, of course, refers to the name of the New Testament, his name has become a synonym for a person or thing that causes bad luck.

Davy Jones' locker is the bottom of the sea. Of lost ships or drowned seamen, it is said that they have gone to Davy Jones' locker.

Q.—How did the Mardi Gras carnival of New Orleans get its name?
A.—Mardi is French for "Tuesday." It refers to Shrove Tuesday, which is the day before the beginning of Lent, therefore, the last day of feasting. In France a fat (frais) ox was ceremoniously paraded through the streets.

In New Orleans the carnival of Mardi Gras ends on Shrove Tuesday. "King Rex," accompanied by his "Mystic Krewe of Comus," appears in the spectacular parade of floats, and is later unmasked at the Mardi Gras ball.

In Roman Catholic countries the carnival is a period of festivals and merrymaking preceding Lent. The carnival takes its name from the Latin phrase carne vale, meaning "O flesh, farewell!" an allusion to the putting aside of carnal things during the Lenten season. (Carnal is from the Latin carnis, which means originally "meat.")

Girl Accepts Job in Rome to Get a Room

WASHINGTON.—Latest sidelight on the Washington housing shortage is the story of the girl who had to settle for a room in Rome, Italy.

Coming to Washington to take a job with army intelligence, the girl found temporary quarters at the YWCA, but couldn't find a permanent room. The army offered her an assignment in Rome. She took it, saying: "I'd rather stay in Washington, but after all, I had to have a room and the army assured me I'd have one in Rome."

Supplement to Urea

Urea, the nitrogen compound, known as a "protein" substitute for feeding animals, works well for growing helters in a ration made up of roughage, molasses, urea and a small amount of either protein or starch.

Molasses, urea and low-protein roughage does not constitute a good ration alone but should be supplemented by some such protein as casein. The molasses does not stay in the animal's rumen long enough for micro-organisms to convert it into the molasses and urea into protein. It is for this reason that some other form of protein must be added.

Food-and-Mouth Fear

A warning to livestock owners to be alert against the possible appearance of foot-and-mouth disease has been issued by the American Veterinary Medical Association. It is believed that the disease may become a "fellow traveler" to the hundreds of thousands of soldiers returning from overseas areas where foot-and-mouth disease is widespread among livestock. The disease has been completely eradicated from America.

HEALTH HINTS FOR LIVESTOCK

Specialized "dietary diseases" seem to be playing an increasingly prominent part in curing livestock diseases.

Over the years, a need of years has developed for many mineral elements important to livestock health. Also, because of the development of artificial diets, the need for vitamins has become more acute. As one rooster can service 70 hens a week by this method of reproduction, it becomes of commercial importance within the industry.

Artificial insemination is also proving valuable in hybrid and cross breeding and in what would otherwise be forced or individual matings, or for hens kept in laying cages.

Some of the advantages are that older males may be used, new blood is introduced from a distance, rapid flock improvement made and that much of the disease danger is eliminated.

Wronged Husband, 17, Shoots Rival

Killed Man Who Won Wife 'Under My Nose.'

LOS ANGELES.—An outraged 17-year-old husband told police he shot and killed Harold Timothy Young, 38-year-old father of three children who wooed and won his wife away from him "under my very nose."

Leon Benson, 17, a warehouseman, was held on suspicion of murder. Deputy sheriff said he freely admitted shooting Young when he "found him making love to my wife."

Benson and his pretty 16-year-old wife, Lois Jean, celebrated their first wedding anniversary three days ago. Both are from Alpine, Texas.

Officers summoned to the Benson home by Francis Elgin Smith, 33-year-old father, found Young's body on the living room floor, his head and body riddled with rifle slugs. Benson and his wife were arrested at the home of his mother-in-law.

The fellow has been playing around with his wife for a couple of months," Deputy Gordon Benson quoted Benson as saying. "I finally said, 'To hell with it and went for my gun.'"

The gun was found dismantled and tucked into a bedroom drawer at the Benson home. Benson returned from a ride in Los Angeles and started talking in the living room.

"Young said suddenly, 'I'm in love with Lois. I want her to go to Texas with me.' Smith related, according to police.

"Lois said she'd like to. Benson turned to her and said, 'Do you love him?' She said, 'I think I do, I don't know.'"

"That got Benson. He jumped up, grabbed his gun and blazed away."
